Dreams & Symbols Interpretation

 Bird	News, messages, visitors, freedom. Birds can indicate news arriving from afar. Flying birds can suggest freedom or release; birds entering the house can signify visitors or news coming into the family. The bird's behaviour can change the meaning considerably.
 Horse	Strength, movement, fortune, status and progress. A healthy horse is generally favourable—success, energy and advancement. Riding a horse can mean gaining control or moving forward. A wild or difficult horse may indicate something powerful that is difficult to control.
 Snake	Enemies, jealousy, betrayal, hidden danger—or transformation. This is one of the more cautionary eastern European symbols. A snake can represent a person who is not showing their true intentions. Killing a snake is traditionally favourable: overcoming an enemy or difficulty. A snake shedding its skin can take on a more transformative meaning.
 House	The self, family and one's life circumstances. The house is often closely connected to one's home and family. A beautiful/new house can signify improvement and prosperity. A damaged or collapsing house can indicate family trouble, instability or a major life transition. Entering an unfamiliar house can signify entering a new phase of life.
 Flying	Freedom, liberation, overcoming obstacles and rising above circumstances. Traditionally, flying can be an exceptionally positive dream—particularly if you feel joy rather than fear. It may signify escaping restrictions or achieving something that previously seemed difficult.
 Water	Life, emotions, fortune and circumstances. Clear, calm water is generally a very good sign—peace, health, prosperity and emotional clarity. Dirty or turbulent water can signify difficulties, confusion or emotional turmoil. Crossing water can represent passing from one stage of life into another.

Dreams & Symbols Interpretation

 Being chased	A problem, person or obligation you are trying to escape. In folk interpretation, being pursued can suggest that something unresolved is following you in waking life. If you escape the pursuer, that is generally more favourable—it can mean overcoming the difficulty.
 Being naked in public	Exposure, vulnerability, shame or a secret becoming visible. It can indicate fear that others will discover something you would rather keep private. But if you are naked and not ashamed, the interpretation can shift toward freedom, authenticity and liberation from social constraints.
 Losing your teeth	Loss, worry, family concerns or a significant change. This is traditionally one of the more ominous eastern Europen dream symbols. Teeth can be associated with family and close relationships, so losing them may signify fear of loss, separation or difficult news. However, the exact circumstances matter.
 Failing an exam	A test or challenge in waking life. This doesn't necessarily predict actual failure. Traditionally, it can mean that you are worried about whether you are "good enough," or that an important decision or challenge is approaching. Interestingly, dreaming of failure can sometimes precede success, because the dream represents the fear rather than the outcome.

Eastern European Nuances

Bird	In eastern European folk traditions, birds are especially connected with news. A bird arriving at the house can therefore be read almost like a messenger. A white or beautiful bird tends to be auspicious; an injured or dead bird is considerably less so.

Eastern European Nuances

Horse	A problem, person or obligation you are trying to escape. In folk interpretation, being pursued can suggest that something unresolved is following you in waking life. If you escape the pursuer, that is generally more favourable—it can mean overcoming the difficulty.
Snake	The horse has a particularly strong traditional symbolism in Eastern Europe. It can represent strength, masculine energy, travel, prosperity and one's ability to move through life. A horse that willingly carries you is very different from one that throws you.
House	This is a very rich symbol. A house isn't simply "your psyche," as Jungian interpretation might say. In a Eastern European context, it can quite literally relate to your household, family, property and domestic life. What happens to the house can therefore be important.
Water	The condition of the water is critical: • Clear water: good fortune, peace, health • Still water: stability • Running water: movement/change • Deep water: something unknown or beyond your control • Muddy water: confusion/trouble • Flood: circumstances becoming overwhelming • Swimming: navigating circumstances • Crossing water: transition
